

Dear Advertiser,

Greetings from the Tribal College Journal — the world's only magazine dedicated to the growing tribal college movement! We know that you are reading this page because you want to reach a critical audience of students and scholars: American Indians and those that support American Indian issues. And you know that they comprise the loyal readership of TCJ.

But, you might not yet know what sets us apart from any other magazine in our market, and why so many advertisers in academia and beyond consider TCJ to be an essential element in their marketing plans year after year.

What are the reasons? First, it's the quality of our magazine. For 20 years, we have covered the news, newsmakers, and issues in the Indigenous higher education movement, earning multiple awards for excellence in design and content from the Native American Journalists Association and from the Society of National Associations Publications. Our readers trust the consistent quality of our publication.

Second, it's the quality of our readers- your prospective students, faculty, employees, and customers. More than 18,000 readers look to TCJ to provide the Indigenous angle on critical issues, and by extension, they trust our advertisers. Peruse our latest reader survey results and you'll see why.

You already know that the leaders of Indian Country are a critical audience for your message. By advertising with TCJ, you will be among those institutions who have found a way to successfully reach them. See our rate card for specific information about our print advertising rates and online opportunities. Call me today at 970-533-9799 with questions. I look forward to working with you.

Sincerely,
